MEMORANDUM DECISION AND

MOTION FOR VOLUNTARY
DISMISSAL WITH PREJUDICE

Case No. 2:13-cv-00204-DN

District Judge David Nuffer

Plaintiff Global Fitness Holdings, LLC (“Global”) filed this suit in October 2012 against Federal Recovery Acceptance, Inc. and Federal Recovery Services, Inc., two related entities (collectively “Federal Recovery”). Global brought claims for tortious interference,¹ promissory estoppel,² conversion,³ breach of contract,⁴ and breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing.⁵ All the claims arise out of the alleged refusal of Paramount, Federal Recovery’s subsidiary, to cooperate with Global when Global was acquired by L.A. Fitness,⁶ a non-party to this litigation. Paramount provided the billing services for Global’s large membership base.

In the Global–L.A. Fitness sale, Global was to transfer customer data to L.A. Fitness,⁷ but Global claims Federal Recovery wrongfully withheld the data pending Global’s payment of termination fees to Federal Recovery.⁸ Global also alleges Federal Recovery withheld over $500,000 in funds owed to Global.⁹ Federal Recovery denies wrongdoing in withholding the data and funds, and has now filed several motions for summary judgment on all of Global's claims,¹⁰ including the claim that Global now seeks to voluntarily dismiss.¹¹

With the summary judgment motions now fully briefed, and with discovery now completed, Global filed this motion to voluntarily dismiss its breach of contract claim, only as it relates to the transfer of data, with prejudice.¹² Federal Recovery has opposed Global's voluntary dismissal motion on several grounds.¹³ For the reasons below, Global's Motion for Voluntary Dismissal of its Breach of Contract Claim as it Relates to the Transfer of Data is GRANTED.

OVERVIEW OF MOTION

pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 41(a)(2)¹⁵ Global principally argues that because there will be no “legal prejudice” to Federal Recovery, the motion should be granted.¹⁶ Global acknowledges that it cannot make a breach of contract claim regarding the data transfer because the contract “do[es] not govern, discuss or even reference the data, much less when or how that data should be transferred.”¹⁷ Global further argues dismissal with prejudice would benefit Federal Recovery.¹⁸

In its Response Memorandum, Federal Recovery argues that it will suffer prejudice if the claim is dismissed, and that the court should instead grant its Motion for Partial Summary Judgment¹⁹ on the breach of contract claims.²⁰ Federal Recovery points to the expense of “considerable resources and time” in preparing its several motions for partial summary judgment, each of which “make[s] at least some use of Global’s allegations . . . that Paramount breached the parties’ Contracts”²¹ Because each of those issues is now fully briefed, Federal Recovery argues that granting Global’s voluntary dismissal “will only serve to confuse the issues” already before the court.²² Federal Recovery also argues that it is prejudiced because it will not be entitled to attorney’s fees for the claim that is dismissed.²³ However, Federal Recovery never requested an award of attorney’s fees in its motion and filings related to the breach claim, even though Global sought fees in its breach claim.²⁴ The remainder of Federal Recovery's arguments follow the Tenth Circuit's multi-factor test for determining legal prejudice in Rule 41(a)(2) motions.²⁵ Federal Recovery argues that Global's excessive delay,²⁶ insufficient reasoning for dismissal,²⁷ and the late stage of the proceedings warrants denial of the motion.²⁸

DISCUSSION

I. Legal Standard Governing Rule 41(a)(2) Motions to Voluntarily Dismiss With Prejudice

When considering a Rule 41(a)(2) motion for voluntary dismissal, "the important aspect is whether the opposing party will suffer prejudice in light of the valid interests of the parties. It is the prejudice to the opposing party, rather than the convenience of the court, that is to be considered in passing on a motion for dismissal."²⁹ For denial to be appropriate, the nonmovant must demonstrate sufficient "legal prejudice" as determined using the Tenth Circuit's four-factor analysis in Ohlander v. Larson.³⁰ Under Ohlander, the court must consider "the opposing party's effort and expense in preparing for trial; excessive delay and lack of diligence on the part of the movant; insufficient explanation of the need for a dismissal; and the present stage of ²⁸ Id. at 11–13. Federal Recovery also argues that Global's Motion came after it had filed for summary judgment. Id. at 12. This is immaterial because Rule 41(a)(2) motions are, by their very nature, filed after summary judgment motions have been filed on a given claim. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 41\(a\)\(1\)–\(2\).

Mar. 10, 2009) (holding that nonmovant had "met its burden of showing legal prejudice"); Smith v. Lenches, 263 F.3d 972, 975 (9th Cir. 2001) (noting that a district court should grant a Rule 41(a)(2) motion "unless a defendant can show that it will suffer some plain legal prejudice as a result").

litigation.”³¹ Each factor should be considered, and none is dispositive.³² Ultimately, it is within the district court’s discretion to grant or deny a Rule 41(a)(2) motion,³³ but “[t]he district court should endeavor to insure substantial justice is accorded to both parties.”³⁴

It is not enough for denial of a Rule 41(a)(2) motion that a plaintiff simply seeks to gain a tactical advantage in moving to voluntarily dismiss.³⁵ Furthermore, while there is no rule requiring a voluntary motion to dismiss with prejudice to be granted,³⁶ only “rare circumstance[s]” warrant denial of such a motion, such as when “other parties to the litigation” will be adversely affected by dismissal.³⁷

II. Federal Recovery Has Not Shown Sufficient Legal Prejudice to Warrant Denial of Global’s Motion for Voluntary Dismissal.

While Federal Recovery is able to demonstrate some prejudice under the four factors from Ohlander, it does not sufficiently rise to the level of the “rare circumstances” in which a motion to voluntarily dismiss with prejudice is denied.

The court must first consider “the opposing party’s effort and expense in preparing for trial.”³⁸ Federal Recovery argues that it has expended “considerable resources and time” in preparing its several motions for partial summary judgment, each of which “make[s] at least some use of Global’s allegations . . . that Paramount breached the parties’ Contracts”³⁹ This is a valid concern given that attorney's fees are unavailable to Federal Recovery on this motion because Global proposes a dismissal with prejudice.⁴⁰ But Federal Recovery's effort and expense is not wasted if Global's present motion is granted. Federal Recovery's pending motions for partial summary judgment⁴¹ lose no value if a portion of Global's breach of contract claim is dismissed because, as Global argues, this court "will still determine whether the contract provides a defense for Paramount's behavior or serves as the basis for [Paramount's] Counterclaim" even with the present portion of the breach claim dismissed.⁴² Further, Global only seeks to dismiss the breach of contract as to the transfer of the data, not the whole claim.⁴³ As a result, the "significant expense" factor does little to aid Federal Recovery's prejudice argument.⁴⁴

The court must next consider whether there was "excessive delay and lack of diligence on the part of the movant."⁴⁵ This second factor is also largely unhelpful to Federal Recovery. While Global's decision to drop a central claim in its case comes after motion briefing, Global has been "diligent [in its] overall prosecution of the case."⁴⁶ Further, Federal Recovery has not shown why any delay on the part of Global has or will prejudice them outside of the prejudice associated with filing a summary judgment motion on the claim, already discussed in the first factor from Ohlander. Federal Recovery's argument that Global's delay was unwarranted

⁴² Reply Memorandum at 9.

⁴³ See generally Motion for Voluntary Dismissal.

because Global should have known of the weakness of its claim earlier⁴⁷ does not demonstrate how such delay is prejudicial and does not consider the effect of the refinement of issues in the briefing process. Certainly, prejudice of expense and delay would be greater if Global insisted on proceeding to argue the motion for summary judgment. The legal prejudice Global's delay would cause Federal Recovery is not substantial, if it exists at all.

The court must next consider whether Global has offered an "insufficient explanation of the need for a dismissal."⁴⁸ This third factor weighs in favor of granting Global's motion.

Federal Recovery argues at length that Global's explanation for seeking voluntary dismissal is insufficient,⁴⁹ focusing on Federal Recovery's viewpoint that the contracts do in fact govern the transfer of data.⁵⁰ The merits of Global's reasoning for dismissal are not at issue, as Federal Recovery implies with its argument. The movant is only required to give more than a "perfunctory excuse about extraneous matters."⁵¹ Pointing to a "deficiency underlying [a] motion for summary judgment" is sufficient explanation.⁵² Here, Global has explained its reason for dismissal by pointing to what it characterizes as a deficiency in its argument.⁵³ Accordingly, its explanation is sufficient.

Finally, the court must consider "the present stage of litigation."⁵⁴ This factor, though weighing in Federal Recovery's favor, is insufficient to overcome Federal Recovery's inability to show prejudice in the other three factors. Further, Federal Recovery is again unable to demonstrate how the stage of litigation creates prejudice. Federal Recovery's explanation regarding this factor relies exclusively on the reasoning in Phillips USA, Inc. v. Allflex USA, Inc.,⁵⁵ in which the Tenth Circuit affirmed denial of a voluntary dismissal motion without prejudice.⁵⁶ That case is inapposite for two reasons: First, the dismissal was without prejudice, leaving open the possibility of raising the issue again in the future despite the late stage of the case.⁵⁷ Second, several reasons supported the district court's denial of the motion in Phillips, including that numerous extensions had been requested as to the claim at issue, that there was insufficient explanation for the voluntary dismissal, and that the case had been pending for over a year.⁵⁸ Here, the stage of the litigation is not sufficiently late to justify denial of the dismissal..

Under the four-factor analysis of Ohlander, Federal Recovery has failed to show that this case is one of the "rare circumstances" in which a motion to voluntarily dismiss with prejudice should be denied.
